A New Terror Bred in the Swamps of New Jersey

ARE TWIN SCREW MOSQUITOES

It Sings and Bites at Both Ends and Flies With Reversible Wings in Either

Direction.

A new curse has come upon New Jersey in the shape of a twin-screw or double-end mosquito. This insect, bird, or brute, variously called by the na-tives, has the ferocity of a dozen ordinary Jersey mosquitoes, has two heads, and an instrument of torture at either end, four wings, twelve legs, and it is believed that it lives entirely on human and asimal blood. It seems, says the New York Sun, to have appeared first in the sait meadows between Newark and Jersey City, and within two days it had spread or been bred in other parts of the state. Two weeks ago a party of hunters were out on the Hackensack meadows looking for dunk when a swarm of these strange new creatures arose from the tail grass and flew in the air. They were a hundred feet from the hunters. As they flew there was a sound almost as loud as the whirring of the wings of a lot of quall, but it was on a higher and more piercing key. It startled the hunters The inocts were about the size of the ordinary locust, and some of the hunters thought It possible that that was what they were. They made straight for the

Two of the men reised their guns and fired loads of duck shot into the swarm, killing at least a hundred. The rest of the swarm stopped short and made for the tracks of the Pennsylvania railroad, where a party of nearly a dozen tramps were slouching along. The hunters watched them and could see them settle down about the heads of the tramps. A moment afterward loud cries were heard and the tramps fled down the track toward Newark, the swarm following them. The hunters pushed on to where the killed and injured insects had fallen and gathered up a lot that had been merely stunned by the shot and brought them to Jersey City as curiosities. Some of them were given to Prof. George Hume, the famous entom-ologist, of Jersey City. He searched through all his books, but could find no record of any insect even remotely resembling this except the mosquito, and, curiously enough, the mosquito resembled exactly one half. Cut the insect in two in the center and it would make two perfectly good mesquitoes. The professor decided to call the insect a twin-screw mosquito because it had two blood suckers, and it will bereafter appear in the books under that name. The professor's investigations and examinations have been most exhaustive, and he intends writing a treatise on the tusect for a scientific paper. He had about completed his work on the issect he had dissected when a reporter called on him and he consented to tell a great deal that he had learned, as well as to rmit an artist to make copies of skethes he had made.

UTILITY OF RATS. They Figure in the Commerce of Various Lands.

It has often been said that the glove makers of Paris make use in their trade of the skins of rate which are saught in the sewers, but this has been fenied. Certainly, says the Washingion Star, the material would not be strong enough to successfully counter-feit the kid unless it were for the thumb part only, which is generally of a thin-mer and different kind of leather from

A thrifty Weishman at one time exhibited himself publicly in England attired in a costume composed from top to toe of ratskins, which he had spent three years and a half in collecting. The dress was made entirely by himself. It consisted of hat, neckerchief, coat, walstcoat, trousers, tippet, gaiters and aboes. The number of rats required to complete the suit was five hundred and seventy. Most curious of the garments was the tippet, composed entirely of rate' tails.

The negro slaves of Jamaica used to regard them as a dainty, their masters not providing them with any other meat. Their method of cooking the toothsome rodents was to impale each one on a long wooden skewer, after cleaning the animal and cutting off the tail, turning it briskly around over a are until the hair was all burned off. Then it was scraped until free from fur, and finally the end of the skewer was stuck into the ground, inclined toward the fire, until it was toasted dry and erisp, thus being made ready for the Rats may commonly be seen for sale in the markets of any Chinese town, split and pressed under a heavy weight so as to look somewhat like a dried fish. In this shape the pig-tailed Oriental buys them, sonks them in water and then boils, roasts or fries them.

A HEALTHFUL REGION.

Its Atmosphere Was a Restorer of Lest

Lungs. Not long ago a Chicago Tribune writer was in a country noted for its health-fulness. One of the men whose business it is to boom the town told the following as an inducement:

"There was a man who lived in Illinois who had consumption. He had ten thousand dollars' life insurance which he had placed on his life before he became marked. The doctors told him he could not live six mouths; his friends encouraged him the same way. He told them he did not think he would live that long, and that he did not care if he died the next day. He made a sale of his life insurance policy at meenty-five cents on the dellar and came here with his seventy-five hunfred dellars in money. He went to the cometery here and bought a lot and got it mighty cheap, for there was herer much demand for that sort of real estate in this vicinity. While he was fixing it up and while he was culwas fixing it up and while he was cul-tivating the acquaintance of an under-taker he began to get better. He had can lung when he came here and you could hear him breathe a block away. He lingered until he began to pick up, and the first thing we know he had sold his lot in the cometery. He actually grow a new lung without taking any thing except the blessed atmosphere of thing except the blessed atmosphere of this glorious climate. He get well of the consemption. He went into busi-

THE REAL TEST.

Going Up in a Balloon Is Easier Than

A new view of the aeronant's skill is that given in "A Winter Cruise in Summer Seas." An Irish balloouist once said to the author of the book: "We speak of the number of a man's ascents. as if that gave the measure of his skill. It would be more to the point, I think, to speak of his descents, for those are the real tests."

"I thought one involved the other," was the reply.

Then, sir, you thought wrong! The balloon makes the ascent for you, but you must arrange the descent and make it for yourself. If you leave it to the balloon all the happy chances in life may not save you." "But what can happen? At least you will come down somewhere!"

"As a matter of fact," was the rejoinder, "I knew a man who made two ascents and only one descent. When he was four miles high the balloon was struck by lightning and it and all its contents were swept into space. For all I know they are at this day revolving in impalpable dust round the

Such a statement is worth considering before taking very extended aerial journeys. Most of us would object to becoming star-dust, and few are sufficiently brilliant.

HUNTING THE MOOSE.

An Animal That Is Very Searce and Hard to Capture. The only real moose-hunters are half-breeds or full-blooded Indians. Without the aid of these native sportsmen the white man has but little chance of capturing antiers for hall or diningroom. When the snow is deep, and the white hunter is provided with snowshoes and a reasonable amount of woodcraft, he may believe some success. The moose, says Frank Leslie's Weekly, is necturnal and feeds at night upon the tops of the gray and golden willow. During the day be sleeps, but always with one eye open-or, more literally, with one ponderous ear ready to catch and transmit the slightest sound to the brain in the great awkward head. The wise hunter, who understands the habits of the game, does not run headlong on the trail when he strikes it in the snow, because the moose has thought of that and doubled on his track, and maybe at the moment the trail is struck, quietly watching the snow-shoers from a thicket not more than twenty feet away. Hence the hunters with greater caution constantly make detours from the trail until the game is located. If the moose is only wounded when fired upon he is a dangerous foe, for he will dance on his hind legs like a dancingmaster, and strike with his sharp forefeet like an expert fencer. He seldom uses his antiers unless wounded in one of his dancing legs, when he must needs use his head as an offensive

A few moose are still left in Maine with now and then a straggler in northern New York, but they, like the buffabe long before a few skins in the museums will furnish the only visible traces of this grand forest king.

FEMININE VANITY.

A Photographer's Ingenious Way of Catering to It.

A London photographer has con-ceived an idea which has already made him fame, and deserves to make his for tune. He noticed, says the Chicage Times, that when he had a lady citter with lovely, graceful feet she was always at least willing to let' them ap pear in the picture, but that when the boots were over size she took care to keep them under the edges of her gown. So this man of genius caused to be constructed a pair of artificial feet of dainty proportions, and had them dressed in the newest and most approved bottines. These he exposed in his atelier and explained to visitors. After awhile he delicately auggested to a lady whose feet were uncompromising that she permit these to enter into the picture, and, deftly hooking the false feet to the hem of her gown, made s charming full length photograph. His success has dated from that day. London women don't mind availing themselves of the artificial beauty any more than of powder or any other toilet sid. Apropos of successful photographs, there is a very simple way of prevent-ing the depressed, disconsolate look that one's face is apt to assume in the forced repose of a sitting. It is to drink just a thimbleful of aberry in the dress-ing-room. It will put into your face the tiny touch of life and animation that adds so much to the beauty of a likeness, and which is so apt to degenerate into a grin when assumed to or-

Wales' First Julep. The prince of Wales drank his first mint julep when he was in the United States at the Exchange botel. Richmond. It was concocted, says the N. Y. Witness, after the most approved Virginia method and given to the prince in a large cut-glass flagon. "We will close the door and leave your royal bighness to enjoy this Virginia's best," was the polits remark when the mint julep was brought in. When the door was opened an hour later the prince was alone and the great cut-glass dagon was empty. Ever since that time the room has been known as the prince of Wales' room. It was occupied afterward by the marquis of Lorne and Princens Louise, Don Carlos, count of Paris and other notables. The flagon was lost in reconstruction days.
